

INDIA BOYCOTTS JAPANESE GOODS TO FIGHT BRITAIN

Peaceful Revolt Spreading to Vast Proportions, Says
Seilendra H. Ghose.

Boycott of Japanese goods has been added to that of British imports by natives of India in the Swaraj (self-government) movement. That an announcement was made here last night by Seilendra H. Ghose, national director of the Commission for the Promotion of Self-Government in India.

"Since the beginning of the world war, Japanese trade has greatly increased, and with declaration of the boycott by Mahatma Gandhi against British goods, Japanese imports in India increased more than 600 per cent," Mr. Ghose said. "By extending the boycott to Japanese goods, the republican party of India is confident of so arousing public opinion in Japan that the government will have to dissolve the Anglo-Japanese alliance, thereby weakening British influence in India and throughout Asia."

"Reports received by me within the last few days show the peaceful revolt against British rule in India is spreading to great proportions. In that connection, it is well to note that India will not be bound by any agreements, understandings, treaties the British government may make at the approaching conference on limitation of armaments and Far Eastern questions. India can not feel bound to respect any convention in the making of which it has no voice, and Republican India will certainly not agree to any disarmament project while it is still held in subjection by England.

"India, like every other nation, is crying for peace, but not for a peace that leaves it under the yoke of an alien despotism. Until all the nations, small as well as great, have their independence, there can be no lasting peace, and the delegates to the conference here will have to recognize that fact."

"British navalism is the greatest menace to world peace today. Until British supremacy on the sea is ended, and the freedom of the seas established, no nation—the United States as well as the smaller nations—is safe. And by British navalism, I mean not only the navy of warships, but the great British merchant marine which is so controlled by the government that it can be turned to war purposes at any time. I hope the American delegates to the arms conference will realize this danger, and join with the other progressive nations in curbing the British power."

"So far the self-government movement in India has been carried on peacefully; what fighting there has been has been of a sporadic nature and not part of a general armed rebellion. But there are in India 73,000,000 men of military age who can be armed to drive out the British if warfare is necessary to gain our independence. We hope that will not be necessary, but if it is England will find herself fighting not a great mob of untrained men, but disciplined bodies, including tens of thousands of soldiers who served in the world war."

Washington Overseas League is Inaugurated

"Loyalty to the Red Cross organization through willingness to serve in peace time work and in emergencies, to continue the fellowship developed through service overseas and to promote plans for mutual benefit."

The organization consists of Washington women who served with the Red Cross abroad. Its activities are carried on in connection with the District of Columbia chapter. Its members help in canteen work at Walter Reed and St. Elizabeth's. The new first-aid class is under the direction of Major M. J. Shields.
